The Immune Assessment Symposium, hosted by the Lurie Cancer Center, will include two days of lectures, abstract presentations and poster displays.

The meeting is intended to promote cross-disciplinary exchanges to discuss current standards in immune monitoring and immunotherapy assessment for clinical and translational studies. Our goal is to establish a forum that brings together scientists studying immunotherapies and immune responses to review the current immune monitoring techniques and define a common thread for the usage of upcoming and future technologies to precisely evaluate immunologic responses in both basic and early-stage clinical research settings.
